

SIR CUPID OF THE PURPLE HEART

By GRACE ROWAN

Copyright, 1903, by T. C. McClure

The fate selected Paul Harvey's devotion for his sister as their tool, and with it drove him straight to his doom. His idolatrous affection for his sister, Virginia, who had "mothered" him ever since the death of their parents, made superstitious women shake their heads and his club friends smile. When Virginia married rich, easy going James Drew people said things would change and Paul would certainly marry and settle down, just as such an eligible person as he owed it to society to do.

But things did not change. Paul explained that Virginia's heart was roomy enough for them both, and while he dwelt nominally at his university club the real heart fire continued to burn for him in Virginia's beautiful home.

And so it happened that when Virginia's second birthday after her marriage drew near the question of selecting a suitable gift for her exercised Paul's mind considerably more than the fate of certain stocks he had on the market. His broker was paid to look after his business. There was no one he would trust with the selection of Virginia's present.

To his bewildered brain it seemed as if there was nothing which she did not have. Then he remembered the dinner she was to give when a certain art connoisseur should arrive from Paris, and he decided that some unique decoration for her table should form his gift. Further, it should be orchids in some shape or form, for orchids of a peculiar pinkish lavender, with great purple hearts, were Virginia's hobby. This idea he carried to Mrs. Donnelly, a sympathetic friend whose father was a charity bazaar, and from her he obtained the address of a young woman who made silk candle shades of exceeding fineness.

"But, my dear Paul," asked Mrs. Donnelly, as she wrote the address on her card, "Miss Carr's prices will probably stagger you. She charges four dollars for those tiny little things, but she gets her price and you must stand for it. You see, Mrs. Van Allen and her set have taken her up and she has all the orders she can fill."

Paul smiled as he slipped the card in his pocket. Compared to the pearls he had given Virginia last year, a couple of silk candle shades would be a mere bagatelle. But what pleased him and he knew would please Virginia was the personal thought the gift would carry. Virginia was absurdly sentimental for a woman 5 feet 10 who affected tailor made clothes.

And that is how Paul Harvey stood before the small, private entrance of the Carr flat one crisp January morning, with a bit of pastebord in his irreproachably gloved fingers, the popular air of a new musical comedy on his lips and ignorance of impending danger in his heart. Then she opened the door, and he found himself clutching after a bit of pastebord that was slipping from his fingers. The soft whistled on his lips, and a peculiar something in the place where he had heretofore supposed his heart rested clicked out a danger signal.

He introduced himself, presented his friend's card and stated his errand, but all quite mechanically. His real self was asking itself the most absurd questions, such as whether copper colored hair like hers wasn't much more effective than Virginia's blond locks, and why a girl with a carriage like that was working for a lot of inconsiderate, snobbish women, instead of making some good, appreciative chap ridiculously happy.

He was so busy thinking this out that he was quite annoyed when, seated in the diminutive drawing room, he found himself face to face with a mass of "silk things" in many colors, shades of peopoles, of roses, of violets, of chrysanthemums. He wondered if a flower grew that could hold the warm light of her way hair, or if ever a lily was of an ivory so pure as her face.

"Is there anything here you like?" she was saying, and he gripped hard on his cane.

"No; you see, Virginia goes in for orchids. She has such jolly good taste!"

"Yes," suggested the girl sympathetically.

"Her favorite is a purple with a deeper purple heart, and I want the shades just like her favorite flower."

"Well, shall we have a large shade hung with small orchid blossoms, or each shade a single bloom?"

"Bless me, I don't know. You look as if you knew best about that!" And he almost added "and everything else."

The girl was looking a bit perplexed. "If only I could see one of the flowers I could reproduce its tints very closely in silk."

Paul beamed. "The very thing! I'll call a cab and we'll drive right down to Shoreleys. His orchids are the finest in town."

A deep flush spread over Sylvia Carr's face, but she said quietly and calmly:

"That is quite impossible. My mother is not well enough for me to leave her today."

But Paul was already groaning in spirit. "Cad that I am to think she is the sort to ride round in cabs with strange fellows," quite forgetting that he was an eligible in favor with all chaperons. Then his face brightened.

"I'll have some sent up, and please make a dozen shades. I forget how many candles she uses, but she must have plenty of light. And, by the way, you wouldn't mind if I dropped in occasionally to see how they are coming on? You know, Virginia is a jolly good sort, the best sister in the world, and—well, I rather think I take more pleasure in making her a gift than she does in receiving it. It's such good fun to think of how surprised and pleased she'll be."

Sylvia hesitated, then smiled. "I will have some ready to show you by Friday."

And Paul realized that the interview was over.

An hour later Sylvia opened a florist's box and gave a cry of delight. Never had she seen such tints as met her gaze in the purple hearts of those orchids, and under the orchids were other blossoms, sweet scented and dewy.

"These for the mother who is not feeling so well today," read the card, but Sylvia put a white rose in her hair, and when, with one of the orchids in her hand, she started out to buy silk for the shades, she remarked inconsequently, "Of course it is absurd, but I'm glad they are for his sister, even if she is the Mrs. Drew who rolls by me in her carriage."

The shades were finished, barely in time for the birthday. Sylvia had never done more exquisite work, and now she lingered to pack them one by one in their dainty nests of tissue paper, a perfect orchid each one of them, and when they saw the light once more it would be at a feast graced by clever men and beautiful women. But they would go out of her life forever. Something else would go out of her life, too—those pleasant little chats across her sewing table where Paul Harvey had watched the orchids grow. Yes, it was all true, this gossip, that Paul gave all his heart to his sister. But perhaps if a certain slump in stocks and an absconding cashier had not done their united worst for herself and her mother it might have been different.

And she closed the box sharply, tied the twine in hard knots and went out for a walk. She would not be home when the messenger called.

Mrs. James Drew was giving an "afternoon." The crowd was thinning out, and the hostess was standing in a small alcove with Mrs. Donnelly. Said the latter:

"My dear Virginia, I shall always feel that it was my fault. I sent your brother to Sylvia Carr for those miserable orchid shades and now—"

Virginia Drew smiled with lips that quivered just a trifle.

"And now my brother says he is the happiest man in the world. It is odd to see how composedly she meets the women for whom she once made German favors, but she has certainly been a success. Don't you think so?"

Mrs. Donnelly nodded her head, and they both glanced at the graceful figure, crowned with copper colored hair, crossing the room in a long trailing robe of softest gray. Virginia Drew stretched out her hand to touch a silken orchid which topped a silver candlestick.

"I shall keep them always, for in their great purple hearts is woven the love story of the dearest and best brother in the world."

Are Authors Still Hungry?

It is a fallacy to suppose that the day of the hungry author is of the past. The genus still exists. Often, doubtless, he is author because he is hungry, but the more serious case is to be met where he is hungry because he yearns to be author. Grub street has as many tenants as of old, has, indeed, overflowed its bounds in every direction. The inability nowadays to construct a story of some kind is a very rare piece of distinction, and too frequently the ability to do so makes grubs of many who might unfurl wings in more practical states of being. It is this large class of self-appointed grubs that buttress the bread of that modern product, the literary reader, who, by a strange anomaly, is apt to be something of a grub himself, the added gift of discernment. So important a factor, indeed, in the success or non-success of the struggling author is the official reader that it is through his eyes alone that an insight can be gained into the terra incognita lying between the submission of a manuscript and its final disposition.—Guntton's Magazine.

Iron Tree of Vienna.

Hardly the world over could there be found a tree which has come into more intimate connection with the youth desirous of success in life than the curious iron tree of Vienna. For in the old days, when it was the custom of every apprentice who had attained to some degree of proficiency in his trade to bid farewell to family and friends and set out on foot to seek his fortune, he went before leaving the city and drove a nail into this tree's trunk.

Should the nail then drive straight the act was regarded as especially ominous of success and that his road over difficulties would prove smooth, but when it bent or broke in the driving the face of the apprentice turned suddenly awry, he believing that either he would fall utterly in life or that success would only come to him late and through most difficult channels.

In the remnant of the tree that now remains so many nails have been driven that not a vestige of its original wood can be seen. Literally its surface is hard as nails.

Narrow Escape.

She—Of course he bored me awfully, but I don't think I showed it. Every time I yawned I just hid it with my hand.

He (trying to be gallant)—Really, I don't see how a hand so small could—er—hide—er—that is—beastly weather we're having, isn't it?—Philadelphia Press.

COLEMAN Business COLLEGE, Newark, N. J.

COR. ACADEMY & HALSEY STS.
One block rear of the Post-Office.
NEWARK, N. J.

Some Reasons Why You Should Attend the COLEMAN SCHOOL:

1. It is the best equipped private school in the State.
2. It employs the largest faculty of experienced teachers.
3. It will give you the most for your money in the least time.
4. It fills more positions at better pay than any other school in New Jersey.
5. It is the OLDEST, LARGEST, BEST school in the East.

School open the year round.

Write for Catalogue and Booklet.

Established 1862. Incorporated 1888.

H. COLEMAN, President.

J. KUGLER, Jr., Principal.

Special Offer to readers of THE CITIZEN!

10 per cent. discount off regular prices during the next 30 days.

ONLY 35c. A POUND, charged.

In lots of 10 lbs., 28c., paid.

In absolutely air tight 1 lb. trademark bags, preserving strength and flavor indefinitely, even if opened.

Other Good Coffees, 12 to 15c. a lb.

Good Teas in the up, 25, 30 & 35c. a lb.

Excellent Teas, best imported, all kinds, 50c. to 70c. a lb.

Cut out this ad. and forward with order, subject to above discount.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.,

P. O. Box 269, 31 & 33 Vesey St., N. Y.

In Hot Weather

Drink the Best BEER Only

—SUCH AS—

Peter Hauck's Light and Dark, and

C. Feigenspan's Export and P. O. N. Ale

Delivered at Your Residence upon Thirty Minutes' Notice

A Complete Line of Wines and Liqueurs.

H. Snyder & Son,

279 Glenwood Avenue,

Phone 83-B, BLOOMFIELD, N. J.

STEVENSON SCHOOL.

The Academic Department

—OF THE—

Stevens Institute of Technology,

RIVER STREET,

Between 5th and 6th Sts., Hoboken, N. J.

Reopens Sept. 14, 1903

Registration day for applicants for admission on September 9th.

Examinations for admission on the 10th and 11th of September.

Complete courses of study preparatory to all Universities, Colleges, Schools of Science, Law and Medicine.

The rate of tuition for all classes is $150 per year, or $50 per term.

These terms include all the studies.

For catalogue apply to the Principal of Stevens School.

GEO. RIKER & SON,

CARPENTERS AND BUILDERS.

OFFICE:

276 GLENWOOD AVE.

Opp. B. & W. R. R. DEPOT.

Residence, 76 Washington Avenue

TELEPHONE No. 47-A.

Chemicals. Colors. Dyes.

INK

Used in Printing this Paper

IS MANUFACTURED BY

J. M. HUBER,

275 Water St.,

NEW YORK.

Hahne & Co.

Compare our prices with those advertised by New York stores and you will always find ours as low, and in many cases lower, than theirs.

Store Opens 8.30 A. M. Not Open Friday Nights. Store Closes 1 P. M. Saturday.

Main Floor, Third Avenue.

A $15,000.00 Special Sale of Stockings

AT A SAVING OF ONE-THIRD TO ONE-HALF.

The greatest and best of all bargains! They came to us partly by chance and partly because we went after them in an irresistible, forceful manner. In all it is an offering of the most popular kinds used at present, all fresh and perfect, no odds and ends, but full assortment. It is an occasion for which careful, prudent buyers watch with keenest interest, and similar to sales we have held before. Our advice is to be prompt.

The variety embraces so many styles that space does not admit of full description, but an inspection will amply repay. The savings are striking and appear at a glance. We can only quote some of the prices:

Women's 9c	14c	19c	24c	29c	49c
Worth..... 12½c	19c	25c	49c	49c	74c
Men's 9c	14c	19c	24c	45c	74c Silk
Worth..... 12½c	19c	25c	49c	69c	98c
Children's..... 9c	12½c	19c	24c Lace	10c	Infants' 19c
Worth..... 12½c	17c	24c	34c

Third Floor.

Important Events in Floor Coverings.

These are the days when the frugal housewife fairly revels in bargains. This offering contains a most interesting lot of cut rolls and odd pieces of carpetings, representing some of the very best weaves and various patterns which have been most popular this season. There are several thousand yards of them that we wish to dispose of before the season opens, which accounts for the greatly reduced prices.

- Tapestry Brussels, 50c yard, sold all season at 55c.
- Tapestry Brussels, 60c yard, sold all season at 75c.
- Tapestry Brussels, 70c yard, sold all season at 85c.
- Body Brussels, 98c yard, sold all season at 1.25.
- Velvet Carpets, 1.25 yard, sold all season at 1.45.
- Velvet Carpets, 90c yard, sold all season at 1.10.
- Alexminster Carpets, 1.00 yard, sold all season at 1.25.
- Alexminster Carpets, 1.50 yard, sold all season at 1.75.

Main Floor.

Mid-Summer Sale of Good Linens

Many Below Wholesale Cost.

This event brings to housekeepers such economies as are possible at no other time. Our prices at all times run interestingly your way, yet these are more generous than ever:

- Heavy White Scotch Table Damask, regular 45c grade, at, per yard 35c
- White Table Damask, 58 inches wide, 30c grade, at, per yard 25c
- Heavy Silver Bleached Breakfast size Napkins, regular 98c per dozen 75c
- Heavy Irish Linen, Blue white, Dinner Size Napkins, regular 3.00 dozen 2.35

FOUR TOWEL BARGAINS.

The famous Ruddy, a good 50c value at, each 25c

Large Size Scalloped Linen Huck Towels, 25c value, at, each 18c

Hemstitched Huck Towels, size 18x36, regular 15c, at, each 12½c

Extra Heavy Hemmed Huck Towels, regular 12½c, at, each 10c

Free Deliveries by Our Own Wagons and to all Railroad Stations Within One Hundred Miles of Newark.

HAHNE & CO. | Newark, N. J. | HAHNE & CO.

Chas. W. Martin,

WHOLESALE and RETAIL GROCER.

SPECIALTIES:

Choice Teas and Coffees.

CREAMERY (AND) DAIRY

BUTTER.

Telephone No. 90-A.

GEORGE SCHERER'S

Barber Shop

296 GLENWOOD AVENUE,

BLOOMFIELD, N. J.

Best Equipped Tonsorial Establishment in Town.

Sanitary Laws Strictly Complied With.

Sterilized Cup, Razor and Hair Brush Used on Each Customer.

RAZORS GROUND AND HONED.

Children's Hair Cutting a Specialty.

Health! Rest! Recreation!

are assured under the most favorable conditions at

Cambridge Springs,

PENNSYLVANIA.

midway between Chicago and New York, on the Erie Railroad.

You ought to know all about it;

Erie booklet, "The Bethesda of the Middle West," on application to the Ticket Agent or

D. W. Cooke, General Passenger Agent, New York.